4. Scope of Work

Under the People Against Violence in Elections (PAVE) program, IFES will work with the selected partner to train and continue to engage young people (aged 18-29) who have the potential to become future community leaders – at least 50 percent of whom will be women – to promote political pluralism, citizen engagement and community-based violence mitigation, including through advocacy to local decision makers for policies that address youth priorities around elections and their electoral participation. The training program is intended to equip emerging Sri Lankan community leaders with the skills needed to engage constructively in pluralistic spaces and foster greater community resilience and peaceful electoral engagement, especially at the local level. Trained participants will go on to implement initiatives that mitigate drivers of conflict stemming from election tensions and work with government leaders to advocate for governance priorities. The training program will not entail developing new training curricula; it will utilize and build upon the existing PAVE curricula that IFES has developed and used in Sri Lanka and other countries around the world. The selected organization will not be expected to substantially work on PAVE curricula, although IFES may request targeted inputs or information from the organization in the event that IFES needs to make any revisions to the curricula.

IFES anticipates delivering core PAVE modules (Module 1 and Module 2) to at least two cohorts of PAVE participants (25 per cohort) in two districts. Each cohort will participate in two trainings – with each training lasting 2-3 days. Thus, the selected partner will deliver a total of four trainings. Following each training, the selected partner will work with participants to develop and implement advocacy projects, known as action projects, in their districts. In total, the action projects should collectively reach at least 500 people. Applicants' proposals should identify the two districts in which they would implement PAVE and explain why these districts were selected. To avoid overlapping with existing PAVE programming, applicants should not propose the districts of Jaffna and Hambantota.

It is critical that the program consists of a diverse group of participants, such as individuals from ethnic, religious and gender minority groups as well as people with disabilities. Accordingly, participants should be recruited from youth organizations, universities, women's organizations, disability rights groups, and community-based organizations. Recognizing that youth participation was central to the youth activism and that youth engagement in peacebuilding efforts often results in more sustained impact due to a greater likelihood of mobilizing across political or identity-based divides, young people (aged 18-29) will be the focus of the PAVE program. As mentioned above, alumni from the two training cohorts will form a network and develop action projects, through which they will engage with government officials to advocate for priorities around elections and their democratic participation. Additionally, participants may be selected to join a broader network of PAVE alumni in which they would collaborate with participants from PAVE trainings that were conducted in Jaffna and Hambantota in 2023 and early 2024. Members of this broader network will serve as Peace Ambassadors and will work together to continue to advocate for peaceful political processes.

Conduct PAVE Training:

The selected partner will be responsible for working with IFES to deliver the PAVE trainings in two districts. The partner will work with IFES to identify participants for the program; conduct the trainings; and collect monitoring and evaluation data. The long-term goal of this program is to cultivate approaches to resolving electoral conflict in a constructive and non-violent way, contributing to a more peaceful and inclusive electoral environment. In addition to youth, the program will prioritize the participation of women and minorities. Specific activities include the following:

- Develop a training plan in collaboration with IFES.
- Conduct the PAVE program, to at least two cohorts of PAVE participants (25 per cohort), with each cohort undergoing approximately six days of training. Each PAVE module is roughly 2-3 days long so there would be two trainings per cohort.
 - For participant selection, IFES will rely on the network of the partner for determining potential participants for this training program. However, they should ensure all participants are aged 18-29.
 - The local partner should ensure that at least half of the participants are young women, and that there is representation of youth from minority groups, and young people with disabilities.
- Sign MoUs with universities and colleges, youth groups, civil society organizations, and/or relevant governmental authorities for engagement and training of PAVE participants, as required.
- Provide IFES with participant lists, photographs of trainings, at least two stories of potential changemakers, monitoring and evaluation data, and training reports for each training as requested.

Action Project and PAVE Participant Engagement:

After each training session, participants will carry out action projects focused on constructive and peaceful electoral engagement. Through these action projects, which should focus on advocacy, the 50 PAVE participants are expected to collectively reach an additional 500 people. The selected organization will oversee the action projects, including tracking participants' progress in meeting their goals, and will provide mentorship to the participants. The action projects should be an activity led by the participants with the support of the selected organization. The topics of the action project, therefore, should not be determined by the selected partner but identified by the participants in consultation with the selected organization. With this in mind, the selected organization will be expected to:

- Establish and facilitate a forum/community-based group of PAVE participants, where they can hold regular meetings to discuss the progress of their action projects, share challenges, extend support and develop plans for the execution of the mutual initiatives.
- Arrange lessons learned workshop(s) for PAVE participants for showcasing and experience sharing.
- Develop a form that the PAVE participants will be responsible for filling out to document activities that take place during the period of performance of this award.
- Provide oversight and mentorship to the PAVE participants. This should include, at a minimum, holding regular check-ins with participants on the progress they were able to make on engaging in these activities and gather data on these initiatives.
- Provide IFES with updates on events and activities, including on social media, through submission of forms and monthly reports as requested.
- Organize outreach activities to expand the reach of the action projects in collaboration with program stakeholders such as elected officials, political party leaders and other government officials.
- Provide IFES with participant lists, photographs of events, at least two success stories, and monitoring and evaluation data.
