Teenagers Promote the Vote Through Slick Music Video

Some detail from the "First Vote" video . . .

Increased Youth Suffrage Sought

By Patricia Davis
Washington Post Staff Writer

Next month marks the 25th anniversary of the historic day when 18- to 20-year-olds won the right to vote. But most don't even bother.

Since the 26th Amendment was ratified on June 30, 1971, lowering the voting age to 18, the number of young people going to the polls generally has been declining steadily.

Now, some high school students from Northern Virginia and the District are trying to reverse that trend through a hip, fast-paced new video called "First Vote."

In the video, being shown in classrooms across the country, dozens of students from Fairfax High School in Fairfax City, Washington-Lee High School in Arlington and Herndon High School in Fairfax County talk to their peers about the importance of going to the polls.

"One of our responsibilities is to tell those who are calling us the 'slackers' . . . that we are serious about our future," Grace Tran, 18, a senior at Fairfax, says on the video. "We are for change."

The 15-minute video was produced by the nonprofit group People for the American Way, which started its First Vote Project to help improve the youth vote.

During the first presidential race in which young people under the age of 21 could vote, in 1972, nearly 50 percent of those ages 18 to 24 went to the polls, according to the group. That sunk to an all-time low of about 35 percent in the 1988 race.

In the 1992 presidential election, about 43 percent of young people voted, but it's too soon to tell if the slight

Communities Brighten Up for Olympic Torch Relay

By Michael D. Shear
Washington Post Staff Writer

When Carrie Wosicki received an e-mail message recently telling her that the Arlington Public Works Department was planning to tear up the sidewalks along Wilson Boulevard in Rosslyn during June, she jumped into action.

"It's going to look so unsightly. We have to delay that project," she told everyone she could find in the county government, until she got the work delayed. "I said, 'We cannot have the streets torn up when the torch comes through.'"

The torch is actually the torch. The Olympic Torch Runners are carrying it through Arlington, Alexandria, Fairfax County and Prince William County on June 20 and 21 as it travels to Atlanta for the 1996 Summer Games.

Although the flame will be in each of the communities for only a short period, the local governments are using the opportunity to team up with businesses, school groups and nonprofit groups for daylong celebrations. Wosicki, advertising manager for the American Gas Association, an Olympic sponsor, is on the Arlington committee planning the torch events.

In Arlington, there are four festivals planned for different parts of the county. Alexandria will have two. The torch is stopping only briefly in Fairfax, at Mount Vernon. And Prince William plans a celebration when the torch stops at Potomac Mills Mall and smaller events along U.S. Route 1.

Planning for the events has taken months, with some of the Virginia communities forming task forces as early as January. Even so, last-minute changes in the torch's schedule have kept most of the organizers busy.

"With all of the Olympic Committee's restrictions and all, you need to be very flexible," said Prince William School Board Chairman Lucy S. Beauchamp, the regional director for United Way in Prince William and a key planner for the county's celebrations. "We have not been able to release the exact route, so it's been very difficult to do a lot of planning."

Organizers are keeping some details, including exactly who will carry the torch at every place and time, close to the

GMU Rivals Trade Shots

For years they have differed over the direction of George Mason University—GMU President George W. Johnson and Constance Bedell, a member of the university's governing board and a persistent critic.

They worked together in the early 1980's, when Bedell was first on the board. And they have clashed repeatedly since Bedell returned to the board in July after being appointed by Gov. George Allen (R).

So it should not be a surprise that the two faced each other down last week at Johnson's last Board of Visitors meeting before he retires June 30.

The issue had to do with a request Bedell made last month to have a school auditor provide financial information about two student activists who opposed her appointment. Although Bedell backed away from the request after critics

Federal Funds To Help Restore Historic Mill

By Rajiv Chandrasekaran
Washington Post Staff Writer

During the early 1800s, the four-story, red-brick mill in the village of Aldie was a bustling sort of place, unlike most of Loudoun County.

Wagons laden with corn or wheat regularly ambled in from farms in the Shenandoah Valley. Giant stone wheels, powered by the nearby Little River, crushed the grain, and workers used conveyor belts and chutes to fill burlap bags. Later, a cart pulled by a four-mule team would haul the finished product to the port of Alexandria.

All that activity slowly ground to a halt earlier this century, when diesel engines replaced the old water wheels, trucks took over for wagons and bigger factories finally put the mill—which had switched to making cattle feed—out of business in 1971.

Now, the mill may whirl again. After spending 15 years trying to raise enough money to refurbish the building and build a museum on the site, the preservation group that owns the mill last week received nearly $400,000 in federal funding to complete the work.

"This is a big shot in the arm," said Leslie

Andrea Brown, of the Virginia Outdoors Foundation, stands inside the Aldie mill.

H. Grayson, Northern Virginia director of the Virginia Outdoors Foundation, the group that is trying to restore the mill. "Things have been rather dormant here for the past couple of years . . . but this award is going to take us over the final hump."

The foundation, which was given the mill in 1981 by its private owners, wants to make it operational once again, so that schoolchildren and tourists can see how small factories operated in bygone days, Grayson said.

The group also wants to set up a small museum next to the mill, with interactive displays and exhibits that highlight the area's history, Grayson said.

"It's representative of an era in American history that's disappearing," she said. "This mill, in its day, was a big deal."

Over the years, the group has raised about $1.5 million, almost entirely from private sources, to begin the project, said Andrea

Progress On Fairfax Parkway

By Ron Shaffer
Washington Post Staff Writer

Dear Dr. Gridlock: Your column published on June 15, 1995, had an excellent map and write-up on the status of the Fairfax County Parkway. Would you please consider giving us a more current reading on the state of this project, with map if possible?

ERIC GOODWIN

Happy to. This 35-mile, $538 million project is one of the most important ever in Northern Virginia, and certainly one of the most expensive. It will be a new avenue for cross-county travel, relieving the interstate highways and overcrowded secondary roads. "More than half the Fairfax County labor force lives and works in the county, and this road responds to the need for intracounty travel," said Katharine D. Ichter, a senior county transportation official. "It serves the county from the northern tip to the southern tip."

Students Add Energy To Teen Voting Drive

increase was a blip or a new trend, said Sandy Horwitz, First Vote Project director. A study conducted by his group about six years ago also found that 60 percent of young people polled wouldn't even consider volunteering for a political campaign and most put voting at the bottom of a list of civic responsibilities.

"That was quite a discouraging finding," said Horwitz, whose group has helped register more than 350,000 students nationally. "The whole purpose of this project is to try to reduce the decline."

The video features the rock group R.E.M., Aretha Franklin and rap artist Young M.C., and already is a hit. In a little more than two months since its release, according to Horwitz, more than 2,500 free copies have been sent to high schools from Seattle to Sarasota.

"We wanted this to have sort of an MTV feel to it," Horwitz said. "I hope we've struck a really good balance between MTV and substance."

Some of the students in Susie Kay's American government class at H.D. Woodson High School in the District, who were asked to help edit the video before its release, thought the music should be cranked up another notch.

"They said they should live up to the music," said Kay. "To make it a little more hip hop, make it a little more diverse."

Aretha was added. So was an explanation about how to register to vote. And the segment in the video that explains how African Americans and women fought for the right to vote also was expanded, Kay said.

Nearly all of the high schools in the District have incorporated the video into their lesson plans, said Horwitz. Peggy Jeens, a government teacher at Washington-Lee, also uses it, and not just because some of her students are in it.

"Kids like it when you give them something real," said Jeens. "There was nothing fake and hokey about it."

Young people have more opportunities to register today—at rock concerts, in the classroom, while getting their driver's licenses. However, some blame their apathy about voting on a growing list of government scandals or disillusionment with increasingly negative campaign tactics. Others say the fast pace of life today has pushed voting off many priority lists.

"A lot of kids feel it's a hassle," said Latease Adams, 18, a senior at Fairfax High School. "A lot of high school students are busy with sports and other things."

On the video, Adams and her government classmates try to convince their peers that their one vote really can make a difference. In 1994, the video points out, 16 members of the U.S. House of Representatives won their seats by a margin of only four votes or less per precinct.

Getting young people to vote when the presidency isn't up for grabs is an even bigger challenge, according to Kevin Dunn, Fairfax City's registrar. In his jurisdiction, for example, of the 18-year-olds registered to vote, only 17 of 96 went to the polls last November.

Dunn takes the video with him when he visits classrooms in Fairfax City to explain how voter registration works. It has helped him to connect better with his young audience, he said.

When Horwitz's group began casting around for students for the video, Dunn hooked up the producers with some teachers at Fairfax High. Much of the filming there took place in Diane Scheurich's government classroom after school.

In between the rock and the rap, about 10 Fairfax students are seen sitting in a circle, talking about why teenagers don't go to the polls—and why they should. There was no script. The cameras were hand-held, Horwitz said, to give it more of that MTV feel.

The segment about the importance of getting involved in your community shows Herndon High students from the group Students Against Global Abuse, with some of the more than 400 tons of cans they have recycled. Over in Arlington, Jeens's students are shown tallying results on election night.

"These kids really enjoyed it," says Jeens, who served up soft drinks and pizza on location. "It was like, 'Take! Cut! Take! Cut!'"

The video turned out even cooler than Jillian Waldren, 19, expected.

"I thought it was awesome," said Waldren, Fairfax High's homecoming queen and one of the young stars. "I was thinking [it would be] cheesy '80s."

MUSIC

Alexandria Chorus Is Poetry, Emotion

By Joseph McLellan
Special to The Washington Post

American music is a meeting place for many different styles and traditions, as the Alexandria Choral Society demonstrated in two concerts last weekend—Saturday at Trinity Episcopal Church in Upperville and Sunday at St. Rita's Catholic Church in Alexandria.

The program, selected and directed with great care by Kerry Krebill, was titled "A 20th-Century American Sampler," and it put emphasis on living composers and composers in the Washington area.

The first half of the program was dedicated, in one way or another, to expressions of awe as felt by poets in Renaissance Italy, early 20th-century America, 19th-century England and the timeless world of American Indian religion.

The second half was dedicated to lighter material: poems by e.e. cummings and a vividly descriptive setting of six Japanese haiku about frogs. It would be hard to imagine a more varied program, and the fact that all of the music was by living or recently deceased American composers testifies to the vitality and versatility of the nation's musical life.

The six Japanese haiku of "Frogs" by Norman Dinerstein (1937-1982), which concluded the program, were sung in English translation, but the six poems of Torquato Tasso (1544-1595), used by William Hawley (b. 1950) for his "Madrigals," were sung in the original Renaissance Italian text. In a remarkable tour de force, Hawley kept to the form of four- or six-voice madrigals from the period when the poetry was written, respecting the flow of the Italian words and letting it be known that this was modern American music only by a few harmonic touches.

"Frogs," in contrast, took striking liberties with the concise texts to convey froggy atmosphere, activities—even, one might say, personalities.

Let's look at a haiku by Basho:

"An old silent pond . . . / A frog jumps into the pond/ Splash! Silence again." When the frog jumped, the music spread out through the choral voices in the kind of ripples you see when a solid object falls into a still pond. Then the "sh" at the end of "Splash!" became the chorus's command to itself to slip gently into the text's "Silence again."

This kind of treatment with six short poems had the music marvelously hopping, croaking, imitating rainfall and providing a singing contest between frogs and birds.

"Madrigals," by Russell Woolen (1923-1994), used two poems by Elinor Wylie: "Beauty," embodied in rich harmonies and slow-paced melody, and "Velvet Shoes," evoking the hushed atmosphere of a walk in the snow.

William Wordsworth's poem, "She Was a Phantom of Delight," was set to music by Gareth James (b. 1964) while he was a high school senior, but it brings out the sense of awe implicit in the words with a craftsmanship that belies the composer's youth. A sense of awe—this time, awe in the presence of nature—also pervades "Earth Magician" by James Fritschel, which uses a Pima Indian text.

The work most clearly identifiable as modern American music was the marvelously eclectic "Five Poems by e.e. cummings" of Vincent Persichetti (1915-1987).

Each poem had a technique and atmosphere particularly adapted to its text—wispily and transparent in "hist whist," which is about ghosts; solidly traditional in "this is the garden," which is an old-fashioned sonnet, slangy and jazzy in "Jimmy's got a goil," with the music doing melodic and rhythmic tricks to match the poet's typographical stunts.

It was an exhilarating program, performed with polish and an acute sensitivity to style—many styles. This chorus is one of the things that makes Alexandria a very special place.

Historic Aldie Mill May Operate Again

Brown, the foundation's project coordinator. They've used those funds to pay for a host of repairs to the mill, including fixing the water wheels, outside brick work and support beams.

"There's just a lot more to go," Brown said.

The $389,000 grant, one of the largest such awards statewide, will be matched with $108,000 raised by the foundation, officials said.

The grant, allocated by Virginia's transportation board, is funded by the Federal Intermodal Transportation Act of 1991, which mandates that 10 percent of each state's federal road funds be used for enhancement projects.

News of the grant delighted local officials, who have sought to fund the project for years.

"It's a great occurrence," said Supervisor James G. Burton (I-Mercer). "It's going to represent a gateway to the . . . area."

The group plans to use the money to finish renovating the mill building and to clean the canal between the Little River and the building.

The grant also will be used to build a parking lot, pedestrian trails and interpretive signs, Brown said.

Eventually, the group would like to sell small samples of corn meal or flour made by the mill, Brown said.

"There's so much potential here," she said.

Fixing up the mill has been more complicated—and costly—than expected because it involved more than simply shoring up four dilapidated walls, Grayson said. Historians, architects and preservationists have been working together to restore the complicated system of pulleys, conveyor belts and chutes that processed the grain.

"It's not just a building," she said. "It's a machine."

The mill, according to historians, was one of the largest such facilities in the state and the biggest in Loudoun. Built by Charles Fenton Mercer in 1807, it was also one of the most technologically advanced, Brown said.

The mill was visited by President James Monroe, who ground grain there while living at his nearby Oak Hill estate.

During the Civil War, Confederate raider John Singleton Mosby captured several Union soldiers at the mill.

Even in the early 20th century, the building hummed with activity.

"It was quite a busy place during World War I," recalled John Tyler,

"It's representative of an era in American history that's disappearing. This mill, in its day, was a big deal."

—Leslie H. Grayson,
Virginia Outdoors Foundation

81, a retired television repairman who lives in Aldie and who said he first visited the mill when he was 4 years old.

"We didn't have [electricity] here then," he said. "Horses brought the grain in, and the water wheel powered the whole place."

In 1964, competitive pressures forced the mill's owners to switch to grinding grain for cattle feed, Tyler said. It went out of business in 1971, and the village hasn't been the same since, he said.

"I'm very eager" to see the mill become operational again, Tyler said. "I've been waiting for a long time now. I hope I'll still be here when it happens."

Clarification

A story in the May 16 Fairfax Weekly incorrectly reported the number of residents who received advice last year from the county's Agricultural and Natural Resources program. The program gave advice on home and garden problems to 25,500 residents.

Protect our children... protect our future.

In tonight's final budget deliberations, the members of the Fairfax Education Association urge the members of the Fairfax County School Board to seek out cuts which will not damage our students' learning environment. Invest Fairfax County's money in the things that make a difference for our children.

We urge you to eliminate the proposed RIFs; maintain class size at current ratios; and be fair with your teachers and staff.

Our challenge is to prepare, motivate and inspire the young minds of tomorrow. We need the full support of the school board and the entire community to meet that end.

complained that she was misusing her position, Johnson continued to fume.

And so, in a brief speech to the board and without specifically mentioning Bedell, Johnson lamented the "unprecedented degree" the board discussions "have suffered from contentiousness and acrimony." He also denounced the "smear, threat or intimidation" tactics he said GMU critics have used.

Have no doubts, he was referring to Bedell and her conservative allies. As for the request she made for student financial information, Johnson called on the board to denounce any effort "to inhibit or suppress a student's right to free speech, political activity" and the like.

The board agreed to support the idea, but only after Bedell amended the motion to say that members have the same Constitutionally protected rights.

"I didn't give up my First Amendment rights," said Bedell, who has said Johnson has not been accountable enough as president.

The board voted unanimously on an amended version protecting the rights of students and board members to speak out on pressing matters.

Dole's Numbers Look Low

If national Republicans haven't yet figured out the depths of their presidential problems, a Virginia pollster offered a new picture this week that looks like the Grand Canyon.

Senate majority leader Robert J. Dole, who by virtue of his Republican affiliation should have no problem clobbering President Clinton in Virginia, actually has fallen far behind, even in this reliably conservative state. A survey by Virginia Commonwealth University showed Clinton leading, 51 percent to 40 percent. His lead shrank somewhat with Ross Perot in the race as an independent: Clinton, 45 percent; Dole, 36 percent; and Perot, 10 percent.

Those numbers are striking because if Dole cannot win Virginia, he has no hope nationally. Since 1952, Virginia has voted Republican in every presidential election except one (it went for Lyndon B. Johnson in 1964) and both parties automatically put the state in the GOP column and waste little time or resources competing for it.

"If these numbers hold, Clinton will have a 1984 Reagan-style landslide," said Scott Keeter, the poll's director.

Still, Keeter believes that the race inevitably will tighten in Virginia, and Dole could still pull it off. About the same time in 1988, Keeter recalled, Democrat Michael S. Dukakis led Republican George Bush in Virginia, only to lose the state by nearly 20 percentage points.

Senate Candidates on the Web

All three active Virginia Senate campaigns have established electronic home pages on the Web for the fall election. Browsers can call up personal biographies, review campaign statements, sign up as volunteers and scroll through the candidates' latest photographs of family and on the stump.

For the record, former federal budget director James C. Miller III (R) was the first to go online. Then he was joined by incumbent Sen. John W. Warner (R-Va.), and finally, Democrat Mark R. Warner, an Alexandria businessman.

The sites are, respectively: <http://www.netrail.net/~jmmiller>; <http://www.Warner96.com>; and <http://www.MarkWarner96.org>.

Activist Loses School Board Race

Surprising many Arlington politics-watchers, longtime school activist Elaine Furlow was knocked out of the School Board race last week by incumbent Frank Wilson and Libby Garvey, another school activist. Her loss margin: 32 votes.

"Single-shot" or "bullet" voters, those who vote for one candidate alone, made the difference, some observers said.

In last Tuesday's balloting sponsored by the nonpartisan civic group Arlingtonians for a Better County, Furlow, a two-time president of the County Council of PTAs, fell short of an endorsement by 32 votes to Wilson. Of 2,992 votes cast, Garvey netted 1,717, Wilson, 1,570, and Furlow, 1,538.

Both Garvey and Wilson advance to the November election, when voters are to elect two people to the five-member board. The civic group's rules required Furlow to drop out of the race.

Of all Furlow voters, only 14 percent backed her alone. That compares with 28 percent for Wilson and 30 percent for Garvey.

"I think there was an assumption that Elaine was going to get elected, and her people were more concerned about looking beyond her to the number two spot," said former county Democratic Committee chairman Kevin Appel. "And they pulled up the other two as a result."

Garvey and Wilson credited their victories to strong grass-roots work. Wilson, an 11-year board veteran and two-time chairman, added that he ran on his record. Also, as the lone minority member, he said he is sensitive to issues among Arlington's minority communities.

Furlow, who had the fund-raising edge and the backing of several Democratic state senators and delegates, said it's "too soon to say" whether she'll run again, but she intends to continue her involvement with the Council of PTAs and school budget issues.

"I am here for the long haul," she said. "If there is any change in me, it will be to redouble my efforts."

Staff writers Spencer S. Hsu and Ellen Nakashima contributed to this report.

Cell Phones Deployed Against Violence

By Charles W. Hall
Washington Post Staff Writer

Alexandria police, trying to get the upper hand against domestic violence, are turning to a new high-tech weapon: cellular phones to help keep victims in touch with emergency dispatchers.

Officials last week announced the program, saying they will give specially programmed phones to as many as eight women, so that they will never be caught off guard by former mates who are stalking them. The telephones will enable the victims to call for help no matter where they are. The phones are programmed to call 911 automatically, and to receive calls.

"This will go a long way toward protecting the victims of domestic violence," said Alexandria Mayor Kerry J. Donley (D), during a news conference last Thursday at police headquarters. "This is not an issue of race or economic status. It transcends all parts of our society."

The phones are provided by Cellu-larOne and represent a growing effort by cellular phone companies to donate equipment and air time to fight crime. A similar program, involving 25 phones donated by Bell Atlantic NY-NEX, was announced earlier this month in Montgomery County.

Alexandria is the first jurisdiction in Virginia to undertake such a program, company officials said.

"The cellular phone is the most valuable safety tool of the 20th century," said Stephen F. Sitton, president and general manager of CellularOne. "They will bring more stability to the lives of victims of domestic violence."

Alexandria has employed numerous programs to fight domestic violence in recent years. The city requires officers to make an arrest when there is evidence of a domestic assault, and victims who contact police automatically are contacted by the city's Office on Women for assistance, including possible placement in a shelter.

Those efforts have reduced the number of domestic slayings, according to officials. Since 1988, when the programs were initiated, only 15 percent of the city's slayings have had domestic roots, compared with 56 percent in the previous five years.

One woman, who asked not to be identified because she fears retaliation, told reporters that her ex-boyfriend had tracked her down several times at her Alexandria workplace, which did not have a phone immediately at hand. She was forced to placate him until co-workers saw her trouble and came to help.

"When your rights are violated, it's hard to lead a normal life. You're constantly checking the back seat of your car," said the woman, who received a cellular phone from Police Chief Charles E. Samarra.

Sitton said that CellularOne's most aggressive public safety effort has come in Baltimore, where more than 90 phones have been issued to neighborhood patrols in drug areas. The company, which pays all transmission costs, also has given phones to two citizens patrols in Prince George's County.

Communities Plan for Olympic Torch

vest, per Olympic Committee request. Just last week, officials at the White House, where the torch will be June 21, said they wanted a bigger ceremony, delaying the torch's arrival in Alexandria by several hours. A huge headache for planners, they said.

Still, organizers say they predict the celebrations for the rare Olympic moment will come off fine.

"I have never seen such an overwhelming response," said Lorraine Lloyd, sales manager for the Old Town Holiday Inn and an organizer of the Alexandria celebrations. "Everyone is so excited about it. It's an all-American kind of event."

The torch arrives in Virginia in the evening of June 20. That day, Arlington will sponsor four celebrations.

The first, at Marymount University, will be a family-style picnic, with face-painting, moon bounce rides and free food. Throughout the day, there also will be a festival at Gateway Park near the Key Bridge Marriott, with clowns, music and a guest appearance by Izzy, the official Olympic mascot, organizers said.

Ballston Common will host another party that will include a huge sand sculpture of a torch inside the mall and an evening presentation of certificates to each of the Arlington torchbearers.

There will also be a party on Freedom Park, the new park built on the never-completed overpass that runs between the USA Today and Gannett towers.

About 9 p.m., the torch will run through the park before making its way to the Iwo Jima memorial and the eternal flame in Arlington National Cemetery.

"We're doing it all because we are very proud of where we work and where we live," Wosicki said. "It's an incredible honor. . . . We think it's a great way to highlight our businesses and the beauty of Arlington."

On June 21, the torch will begin its travels again at the White House. From there, it will make its way to Alexandria, where the city has organized two festivals. One will be a formal ceremony in front of the headquarters of United Way, a national Olympic sponsor.

The second Alexandria event will be held during the morning at Market Square near City Hall. Local groups will demonstrate several Olympic sports, including judo, weightlifting, boxing and fencing. There will also be a table tennis tournament for elected officials.

"I don't think the torch will be here for very long. It will whiz by," Lloyd said. "Our intention was for people to come down and spend some time here."

After the torch leaves Alexandria, it will make a stop at Mount Vernon, home of George and Martha Washington. Then it heads down Route 1 into Prince William to Potomac Mills Mall, where the torch will make a 15-minute official stop.

Elected officials will say a few words, as will Benita Fitzgerald, a former gold medal winner who was raised in Prince William and will be carrying the torch part of the way through the county.

As the torch run continues down Route 1, organizers said there will be parties along the way in shopping centers and parking lots.

Olympic guidelines prohibit competitors of Olympic sponsors from advertising or doing business along the torch route, but as the torch goes down the Route 1 commercial strip, it may pass by banks and fast-food restaurants that go head to head with sponsors NationsBank or Coca-Cola.

"If they don't realize they are going by a few Taco Bells and Pizza Huts [both owned by Pepsi], that's just the American way," Beauchamp said.

RAISE YOUR STANDARDS, LOWER YOUR PAYMENTS.

Introducing FLEXFinancing From HBL.

HBL is excited to introduce FlexFinancing. This unique financing option allows you to get into a Mercedes-Benz, considered the benchmark of the automobile industry, with a lower monthly payment. There are no rigid lease terms, no long commitments, and upon approved credit, no down payment.

FlexFinancing starts out with an ownership plan based around a particular monthly payment and term length. At the end of the term, you have the option of financing the remaining amount at the original payment, or simply return the vehicle and pay a nominal processing fee.

What makes this plan unique is that you can set your monthly payment at just about whatever you want it to be. Even better, you're not locked into the term length. At any time, you can stop the arrangement and trade in or sell the vehicle. For more information, stop in or call...

SUPPORT MUSIC AND ARTS IN FAIRFAX COUNTY!

All supporters of the arts need to speak before the Board of Education, write letters, make phone calls, and send faxes in support of funding the arts in our schools. Protect your children against cuts that directly affect their education. New studies indicate, as published in the February 19th issue of Newsweek, that music and arts is critical for a well rounded education and your child's development. Your participation is critical and will make a difference.

- Restore the Comprehensive Elementary Strings Program that starts in the 4th Grade.
- Restore Ten Elementary Art Positions.
- Restore Countywide Instructional trips that include the Fairfax Symphony, National Symphony and National Gallery Exhibits.

FOR THE RECORD

The following is a report of how some major bills fared recently in Congress and a record of how local members of Congress voted. NV means Not Voting.

HOUSE VOTES

DEFENSE BUDGET
For-272/Against-153

The House passed a bill (HR 3230) authorizing $266.7 billion in fiscal 1997 military spending, nearly $13 billion more than President Clinton sought. The bill adds $725 million to Clinton's $2.8 billion request for expanded missile defenses and calls for deploying a space- and land-based umbrella against missiles by 2003. Clinton also advocates such a system, but is uncommitted on deployment. The bill provides a 3 percent military pay raise, bans privately funded abortions at military clinics abroad except in extreme cases, requires the discharge of service personnel testing positive for AIDS, excludes openly homosexual individuals from military service and bans the sale of sexually explicit material at military exchanges.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS
For-202/Against-220

The House refused to stop U.S. aid to Russia and Belarus for dismantling nuclear arsenals unless they met 10 conditions set by congressional conservatives. Offered to HR 3230 (above), the amendment allowed Ukraine and Kazakhstan to continue receiving aid under a post-Cold War program for eliminating the former Soviet Union's nuclear weapons. The bill provides $303 million for continuing the so-called Nunn-Lugar program. A yes vote was to deny nuclear dismantling funds to Russia and Belarus.

1997 BUDGET
For-226/Against-195

The House approved a fiscal 1997 budget plan (H Con Res 178) that projects a deficit of $148 billion, revenue of $1.47 trillion and spending of $1.62 trillion. By category, the largest items are $373 billion for Social Security, $267 billion for defense, $242 billion for national debt interest, $233 billion for income security such as civil service and military pensions, $193 billion for Medicare and $130 billion for Medicaid and certain other health programs. While projecting a slight revenue increase over 1996, the measure anticipates Congress cutting the gasoline tax, awarding $500-per-child tax credits and lowering capital gains taxes. Shaped by Republicans, the measure also sets a long-term balanced-budget plan that would end deficit spending by 2002.

DEMOCRATIC PLAN
For-117/Against-304

The House rejected a budget proposal by President Clinton and congressional Democrats. It shared the Republican goal (H Con Res 178, above) of ending deficits by 2002, but to get there it offered softer tax cuts and domestic spending curbs. Overall, Democrats sought $407 billion in domestic spending curbs over six years, compared to the GOP's $650 billion. A yes vote supported the Democratic budget.

SENATE VOTES

MILITARY SPENDING CUT
For-42/Against-57

The Senate refused to cut projected military spending in fiscal 1997 from $265.6 billion to $257.4 billion. The amendment was offered to the Senate's version of the 1997 congressional budget resolution (S Con Res 57), which remained in debate. A yes vote was to cut projected 1997 defense spending by $8.2 billion.

For-55/Against-43

The Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to S Con Res 57 (above) to increase Medicare spending in fiscal 1997 by $50 billion. To offset that amount, the Democratic amendment sought to close unspecified corporate tax loopholes, among other revenue measures. A yes vote opposed the bid to spend more on Medicare and cover the added spending with higher corporate taxes.

STATUS OF THE FAIRFAX COUNTY PARKWAY

The 35-mile project is 70 percent complete. Another 13 percent is under construction and scheduled for completion by late 1997.

Making Connections on Fairfax Parkway

Here's where we are: 24.4 miles are completed; 4.4 miles are under construction; 4 miles are scheduled for construction, and nearly 2 miles are not funded.

In the last year, interchanges have been completed at Frontier Drive in Franconia and at Routes 29 and 50, and road segments have been opened between Interstate 66 near Fairfax City and Lee Chapel Road in the Burke area. That means a motorist can travel on the parkway between Burke and the Reston-Herndon-Dulles area, a trip that can take as much as an hour on congested side roads, in a half-hour or less on the four- to six-lane divided parkway.

The next events this year: Construction began Monday on a one-mile segment from Newington Road to Telegraph Road, in the Newington-Fort Belvoir area; August will mark the completion of a 1.63-mile segment from Lee Chapel Road to Hooes-Pohick Road.

The 4.2-mile extension to Route 7 is not fully funded. First up, the Route 7 interchange, set to begin in late 1997 and to be completed two years later, and a 3.2-mile segment from Sugarland Road to Baron Cameron Avenue set to begin in late 1998 and open three years later.

The part of the parkway between Rolling Road and Fullerton Road is not funded. County officials thought it would be paid for by the Army, which wanted to build a huge development in the area, but that plan has waned. Now there is a proposal to build a major league baseball stadium in the area. County officials are waiting to see what developments occur and may try to get the developer to build this segment in return for county approval.

No MVA Lines in Frederick

Dear Dr. Gridlock:

This letter is in response to your ongoing discussion of the Maryland Motor Vehicle Administration woes that we suffer in this area.

I am a native Montgomery County and have put in enough hours at the Gaithersburg office to get another graduate degree. Several years ago, my husband and I moved to Frederick to be closer to my job in Hagerstown, and we tried the MVA offices in both places. What a difference! NO LINES.

Now that we're back in Montgomery, anything I have to do that can't be accomplished at the MVA-Express will mean I'm off to Frederick or Hagerstown. The extra hour or two drive would be worth it NOT to have to stand in line at Gaithersburg, or sit on the floor, or sit on those backless slabs of rock that make it impossible even to read a book!

DARYL NEWHOUSE
Rockville

Inefficient Window-Hopping

Dear Dr. Gridlock:

My conclusion, based on 10 hours of observation in the Maryland MVA offices, and in comparison with several other states: The MVA requires visits to multiple windows for even simple transactions. Each step involves a wait while the person goes to the window. In most states, there is one line and one worker handles the entire process.

This inefficiency adds up to wasted time in Maryland for each transaction.

LILLIAN BURKE
Hanover, N.H.

Ron Freeland, the MVA commissioner, says restoring customer service efficiency in Gaithersburg is his number one priority. When that's in motion, which he expects will be about July 1, he will move on to Largo, which draws the second-most complaints of all the MVA offices.

"The governor has made clear that I have to stabilize those two, improve customer service in the Washington, D.C. area, while bringing a third office on line in the area if I want to keep this position," Freeland said.

So far, he has added managers and staff at Gaithersburg, including roving customer service agents who walk the lines to help determine what people need and direct them to the appropriate window. They also give estimates of how long the wait will be and give out numbers so those in line can sit and read.

The backless benches are gone, replaced by more comfortable seats. Next month, a reconfiguration of the office should help create more defined lines and establish an information booth at the facility entrance. New lighting is on order ("The old lighting made it look like a dungeon," Freeland said.). Students from nearby Montgomery College have been signed on to help in peak periods.

His goal, Freeland said, is for customers to wait no more than 30 minutes to conduct business. "We have some work to do before we reach that goal in Gaithersburg," he said. Freeland said the wait is now running one to two hours during busy times.

The ultimate solution, he said, will be to open a new MVA office between Largo and Gaithersburg. The General Assembly has approved that, and site selection is under way. But the facility won't open for two years. Likewise, it will take about two years (and more money) to obtain the software that would allow each Maryland customer to conduct all business at one window, Freeland said. Dr. Gridlock applauds him for trying to make things better.

Freeland has been studying the Virginia Department of Motor Vehicles operation. "I took a close look at what they are doing better, and unfortunately, that's a number of things," he said. He said he hopes to equal and even surpass Virginia in some areas.

Stripped-Down Information

Dear Dr. Gridlock:

I notice that there is now a black magnetic strip on the back of my Maryland driver's license. What is that for? What information about me is the state storing on those magnetic strips?

W.S. FURIE
Frederick

There ought to be an explanation posted in MVA offices. The new strip, which was put on Maryland driver's licenses starting Jan. 1, 1994, holds the following information, according to Marilyn J. Corbett, MVA spokeswoman:

Your name, driver's license number, license expiration date, birth date, sex, height, weight and identification numbers for the state and American Association of Motor Vehicles.

Maryland put the strip on while redesigning the license to take advantage of future technology that would read the strip and speed up processes at MVA offices.

Virginia has tried the same type strip, with similar basic information, but found the technology surrounding it too balky, and that state has discontinued the strips. Virginia and Maryland spokeswomen say the strips did not cost extra in their license redesign.

The District does not use the strips.

Dr. Gridlock appears in this section each Thursday to explore local transportation matters. He'll try to find out why bad situations exist and what is being done about them. You can suggest topics by writing (please don't phone) to DR. GRIDLOCK, The Washington Post, 1150 15th St. NW, Washington, D.C., 20071. Please include your full name, address and day and evening phone numbers. You may include photos of a particular situation, but photos cannot be returned.
