I. Executive Summary

Following on a USAID-supported IFES program that began in 1998, this phase of CEPPS II DRC originally was scheduled to begin November 1, 2003 and conclude March 31, 2004. In January 2004, previous project elections Technical Expert Micheline Begin was named Chief of Party Micheline Begin (Canada), replacing Ahmad Shariff, and Jean Louis Boutherin (France) joined the project as Administrator.

The $360,000 project focused on providing technical expertise to the DRC's embryonic election administration commission to ensure its political independence and on enabling the effective participation of civil society organizations in the DRC's democratic transition through access to reliable information. During this performance period, with the technical support of USAID partner IFES and its respective partners, the DRC Government of Transition passed the IEC Organic Law on June 5, 2004, bringing into formal existence the Independent Electoral Council, one of the five institutions of transition specified in the Global Accord. After much struggle, the IEC took on a truly independent status and cultivated civil society support in advance of the referendum, national and legislative elections that were scheduled to be completed by 30 June 2005.

The program's funding was scheduled to expire March 31, 2004, but, with the support of USAID, IFES secured three grants of $25,000 each from DAI to permit program continuation until May 31, 2004. USAID then released $120,000 in additional funding to allow program continuation until August 15, 2005. Activities conducted with these 'bridge funds' fell within IFES' scope of supporting DRC's transition and complemented IFES' previous activities. On September 30, retroactive to August 16, $1,873,319 in ESF funds were made available to IFES under a new award to allow program continuation through 30 September 2005.

II. Background and Political Context

International support for a cease-fire and the Congolese peace process known as the Intern-Congolese Dialogue led to agreements in 2002 with Rwanda and Uganda, in Pretoria and Luanda respectively that were followed by the withdrawal of foreign armies from the DRC. This opened new opportunities for improved security, human rights protections, and justice sector development. In the political arena, the ICD led in December 2002 to a power-sharing agreement known as the Global and Inclusive Accords signed by the main domestic belligerents, the unarmed political opposition, and civil society representatives. The Accord provided a legal framework and established the roles and responsibilities of the Transitional National Government, finally launched in August 2003. Its mandate was 24 months, with the possibility of a six-month extension, renewable one time, depending on the status of the administration of elections that would signal the end the transition period.

The Global Accord mandated five institutions of transition: The Presidency (including the President of the Republic and four Vice-Presidents); the Government, comprising 36 Ministries, the National Assembly; the Senate; and the Courts and Tribunals. In addition, the Accord created five "Democracy Support Institutions" including the Independent Electoral Commission, the National Human Rights Observatory, the High Authority for the Media, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, and the Ethics and Anti-Corruption Commission. The Transitional National Government and the institutions it comprises were seen as the primary conflict prevention and management tools, their success key to a healthier government.

Before the formal commencement of the peace process and after a 1998 request from Congolese civil society groups for a local civic education campaign, IFES developed the Campaign for Peace, Democracy and Development and supported this civic education program from 1999–2002. The centerpiece of the Campaign was an easily portable picture-box toolkit that used locally-produced images to effectively communicate the concepts of peace, democracy and development to diverse audiences, including those that did not read or write. IFES helped train 850 animators to present these concepts. In turn, these animators reached over 150,000 people in eight of the eleven DRC provinces.

In 2002, IFES began engaging civil society in the design of democratic institutions. IFES supported the participation of key civil society actors during the peace talks at Sun City and Pretoria, South Africa, in 2002 and facilitated their agenda presentation. Following the peace talks, IFES financed two national workshops, both organized by Congolese civil society groups, related to the creation of an Independent Electoral Commission and a High Authority for the Media, both subsequently and successfully established.

Beginning in June 2003, IFES began to provide technical assistance to the new Independent Electoral Commission as it began to take shape. The Commission members were presented to the two chambers of Parliament on 28 August 2003. The law that would describe the Commission's organization, attributes, and functions was expected to be passed in September 2003. That didn't happen, perhaps due to an unrealistic estimate of the time required to put electoral procedures into place, some parliamentary wrangling, and/or an overall lack of political will. Meanwhile, IFES arranged numerous conferences, workshops, seminars, radio broadcasts, and elections-related publications in order to better inform the target populations about electoral processes.

Three Democracy Resource Centers formed the centerpiece of IFES communication efforts and support to Congolese civil society. The Centers, located in Kinshasa, Kikwit, and Lubumbashi, helped more than 100 civil society organizations actively engaged in supporting the DRC transition process. Each Democracy Resource Center had a broad selection of holdings for on-site consultations that focused on elections, good governance, rule of law, politics, political party development, and current events. In February IFES published an elections dictionary and a basic comparative guide to electoral systems, and distributed them to lawmakers, journalists, and civil society organizations. In addition to providing neutral venues for debates, conferences, or discussions, the Democracy Resource Centers offered several computer terminals with free Internet access and training.

Beginning in February 2004, IFES welcomed as co-sponsor of these Centers the National Democratic Institute, an organization that strengthens democracy through political party development. This cooperation bore witness to the complementary nature of strong political parties and collaborative civil society groups in the development of a democratic society.

As the election calendar gained momentum, IFES continued to engage civil society organizations in support of the DRC's transition to a democratic and inclusive society. The process proceeded in fits and starts. During this project performance period there were frustrating delays in the passage of key pieces of legislation and then sudden unblockings, always amidst a rollercoaster-like security environment.

Early in March 15, the Law on Political Parties was passed by the legislature, quickly followed by the Law on the Media Authorities. On March 28, 2004, in an attempted coup in Kinshasa; four military camps in Kinshasa were attacked simultaneously; the perpetrators were contained by the DRC military the next morning, with four reported fatalities. Serious violence erupted in Bukavu May 26, culminating in the takeover of the town by Laurent Nkunda and Colonel Jules Mutebusi on June 2. This caused violent demonstrations in Kinshasa against perceived UN inactivity and government ineffectiveness. Following negotiations with MONUC, the occupying forces largely vacated Bukavu by June 5, the same day the Organic Law establishing the IEC was passed. On June 11 there was another coup attempt. It was in this context that IFES was carrying out an ambitious program of technical support to the IEC and coordinating support to CSOs committed to a democratic transition.

III. Project Description

A. Summary of Program Activities and Objectives

IFES approached this project with two principal areas for programmatic activity:

1. Support to the IEC, enabling this institution to take a lead and active role in DRC's electoral process
2. Provide targeted assistance to Congolese CSOs, to permit public exposure to and engagement in the electoral process and associated institutions.

These activity lines were specifically designed to achieve the following objectives:

1. Support to the construction of an effective, credible electoral process

2. Reduction of community isolation through enhanced public participation and government accountability during the transition period

Although receiving funding from three different streams within the time covered by this report, IFES' activities remained consistent with these efforts, taking advantage of the varying funding streams to develop activities that could strengthen the programmatic objectives.

B. Support to the Independent Electoral Commission

1. Direct Assistance to IEC, including assistance with initial development of Electoral Framework and Calendar of Electoral Activities

A central feature of IFES' direct assistance were the regular consultations held between the IEC and IFES' Chief of Party. Often held several times a week, these consultations allowed significant themes to be developed that allowed the advancement of the IEC's prospective mandate.

As early as November 2003, the weekly consultative meetings resulted in the development of a provisional calendar and budget for the IEC's functioning during 2004 and a strategy plan for the establishment of 71 liaison offices at the local and provincial levels. Two slightly different texts of CEI Organic Law legislation were adopted on December 27 by the National Assembly and on 28 January by the Senate. The versions were sent Committee to resolve the differences before being returned to plenary of each Chamber and then being sent to the President, who was obliged to send a law to the Supreme Court for its opinion regarding constitutional conformity before its promulgation. The drafts caused a lively debate because of the possibilities that the independence and efficacy of the IEC might be compromised. Among the provisions was a costly, redundant, and unwieldy staffing in liaison bureaus. Another provision called for internal rules and reports to be approved by the current, unelected Assembly, provisions that could conceivably bankrupt the election process and compromise its independence. IFES held numerous sessions in dialogue with the President of the IEC regarding this text pertaining to the organization, attributes, and functioning of the Electoral Commission. Meanwhile, in an unhelpful move, on 22 February, the League of Electors, a Congolese civil society organization, called for a new structure, a general secretariat of elections, composed of elections experts that would oversee the work of the CEI.

Following intense IFES consultations, the CIAT met with the Presidents of the Senate and the National Assembly on February 12, the three vice-presidents of the Republic on February 18, and President Kabila on February 28 to express the concerns of the international community. This was followed by a CIAT press communiqué. There was eventual settlement on 64 liaison offices and 11 provincial offices, with a significant reduction in staff, reporting lines properly organized, and independence intact.

Meanwhile from January through March, the IEC members, still without official status, lobbied the parliament regarding the Organic Law that would give the IEC official status.

Two new members, a female jurist and the rector of the Protestant University of Kinshasa, gave impetus to the process. Nonetheless, the overall authority of the state continued to evidence weaknesses. For instance, the President of the Senate on February 14 launched a fundamental debate on the options for a constitution that was to continue through summer, but there was little follow-through.

To prepare for Organic Law outreach workshops that would engage local leaders in election-related activities, the CEI second secretary Norbert Basengezi Katintima led a CEI delegation to Bukavu and Goma from 13 to 26 February, 2004, accompanied by Ferdinand Kapanga, IFES expert consultant and president of the Congolese League of Electors. Despite lack of basic office supplies, difficulties in travel arrangements, and delays because of security concerns, the team was eagerly received; numerous planning meetings and several radio interviews were held. Seeing the eager reception, Mr. Basengezi was convinced of the need for IEC outreach.

On February 28 in Kinshasa and March 4 in Lubumbashi, the Resource Centers for Democracy, a collaboration with National Democratic Institute, were inaugurated. In Lubumbashi, the media attended and the Mayor welcomed the Center.

On October 28, 2003, the Technical Committee in Support of the Electoral Process began to hold meetings almost weekly to coordinate assistance to the Independent Electoral Commission. USAID, through IFES, played a major role at these meetings. Counsel was sought and given on a range of topics, including draft budgets, voter registration, media aspects, sensitization of the public, political parties, as well as the Organic law. The meetings were coordinated by the MONUC Electoral Assistance Division.

Also, given the looming deadline, various international actors such as IFES, Ali Diabate of the United Nations, Jean-Michel Dumont and Alan Sigg of the European Union continued drawing up calendars and budgets in consultation with the IEC. On March 8, the IEC adopted the new calendar. The publication of this calendar helped reveal who was in favour of respecting the electoral deadline and who was ignoring it.

Implementation of the calendar by the IEC would be pending the passage of the Organic Law formally establishing the IEC. Although the Organic Law for the IEC was passed on June 5, full implementation of the electoral calendar was still blocked by the governments' deadlock over establishing a nationality law and over approving the $15 million initial IEC funding request (See Annex 4).

From April to June, IFES assisted the IEC in planning for a manageable structure of eleven provincial 'liaison' offices and 64 field offices as well as developing terms of references for logistics assistance. This focus on logistics was needed so that, once the Organic Law was passed, the structures could become operational throughout the nation.

At the request of the IEC, IFES also contracted two local consultants for one month, responsible for developing a strategy for IEC field visits. One of the consultants, Pere Leon de St. Moulin, was the foremost demographer resident in the DRC. In late November, Pere de St. Moulin produced a map of DRC indicating the population concentrations and recommended the installation of 71 bureaux de liaison. IFES made 20 copies of this map for the IEC. The other consultant made a map showing, in all regions, health centers, schools, transport infrastructure, means of communication and local NGOs. IFES also made copies of this map for the IEC.

To further its logistical support, IFES helped secure financing from USAID for IEC temporary office space until the IEC could occupy its new offices on June 22. IFES also actively supported the national Sub-commission on Voter Registration in developing technical plans for acquisition and distribution of registration materials, including training manuals. In late June, the IEC transmitted a draft Law on Voter Registration to the Ministry of Planning that had been developed following IFES input.

On March 9, the Catholic Bishops' Conference announced a vast plan of civic education, following their February 14 message criticizing what they said was the deliberate slowing of the electoral process. Nonetheless, 10 of the 14 pieces of transition legislation were still pending as of mid-August 2004.

Meanwhile, IFES closely worked with partners to develop a civic education process. IFES identified local expert Professor Chirume, who, via MONUC, consulted with the IEC on developing a national plan on voter and civic education. IFES' COP also held a training session on March 20th with local expert charged with preparing a national plan on civic education.

As IFES funding flickered and the IEC status remained in limbo, IFES worked closely with Development Alternatives Inc. to develop a series of activities that would keep the CEI process moving forward. With three $25,000 grants from DAI, the IFES Chief of Party and the IEC came up with three work plans for different electoral topics. These work plans laid the groundwork for later IEC conferences in various DRC locations, advancing the dialogue and decentralization processes. The DAI-funded activities are summarized in this table:

Project Title	Dates of Project	Activities	Outcomes
Advancing the Transition through Assistance to the IEC for Voter Registration Workshops	April 1-20	Workshop	Drafted basic plans for voter registration
Assistance to the IEC in Developing Sound Democratic Election Laws	April 21-May 11	Drafting Group	A plan for obtaining civil society input in drafting an electoral law and an activated sense of how to involve the public
Developing Political Party and Civil Society Election Monitoring Guidelines	May 12 – May 31	Consultations with observer and monitoring groups	A CEI project proposal for election process observation and political party monitoring

At the end of March, IFES' COP, along with Mr. Flavien Musitu (CJP) and Mr. Ferdinand Kapanga (Ligue Congolaise des Electeurs) held two training sessions for the IEC's four local experts to prepare draft projects for the joint workshops (voter registration, electoral law, election observation) to be held in April and May. The sessions were held in response to a request from the IEC's Chief of Cabinet. Their purpose was to identify the type of information to be included in donor requests. Three of the experts concentrated on the production of narrative justifications, while the fourth received training in preparation of budget estimates. Drafts of the three projects were submitted to the IEC president in mid-April, although estimates for the costs of the workshops continued into the beginning of June. The first workshop in the series of four was held in Lubumbashi on June 26 on Voter Registration.

Also during this period, beginning in early November and at the request of the IEC, IFES reviewed job descriptions for recruitment of six local experts in the fields of demography, law, communication, finance, and training. As part of this assistance, IFES also assisted the IEC with developing and implementing a recruitment procedure. The IFES COP also worked on the IEC's operational budget for 2004 with experts from MONUC, the IEC and the transitional government's Budget Ministry. The budget stood at $16,403,185 when they started, although all parties felt it over-assessed the IEC's actual needs.

Other IFES assistance to the IEC included the December delivery of surplus office furniture to help equip the IEC in the unfurnished offices provided by the transitional government. In early April, the IFES COP held intensive work sessions with all IEC members to produce a calendar and budget for each department, illustrating a respective strategy, program of activities and needs, according to the various phases of the electoral process. The IEC was preparing these documents at the request of the World Bank, who had indicated its interest in supporting the electoral process.

Finally, from August 11-14, the IFES COP participated in the IEC orientation seminar to discuss assessments of the IEC electoral process to date, the calendar of activities, its present and future mode of functioning, and the registration process. While attending, IFES' COP provided technical expertise on the final drafting of the Internal Rules and Code of Conduct for the IEC.

2. Facilitation of meetings between IEC and Election Stakeholders

Throughout this period IFES programming engaged stakeholders, the CEI, and other governing authorities in elections-related dialogue. At the end of February, IFES contributed twice to the preparation of a meeting between experts from the IEC and the Ministry of the Interior on the issues of voter registration and relationships with the IEC.

On March 26 and 27, IFES organised a Voter Registration Workshop in response to a request from the IEC. The workshop, chaired by the second vice president of the IEC, Mr. Norbert Bazengezi Katitima, included representatives from the IEC, the Interior Ministry, the Electoral Institute for Southern Africa, the Institut National de la Statistique, the University of Kinshasa, and MONUC. On the first day of the workshop, the group debated and forged a consensus on issues such as use of a computerized system for photo identification, type of data to be included on a card, the creation of a national sub-commission to oversee the process of voter registration, and the need for training and civic education. Activities on the second and final day included elaboration of a timetable and $66 million budget for voter registration; however the budget excluded preliminary identification work, cartography, and a civic education campaign. A press conference was held to mark the official close of the workshop, at which the IEC announced that it would pursue the option of voter registration rather than the more costly and time-consuming census favoured by the government. The IEC also announced that voter registration would be conducted in three clear phases by a specific sub-commission.

Two female members of the IEC also attended the woman-focused activity held in the Kinshasa center on March 8, International Women's Day, exchanging views on the electoral process with groups of women.

From April to June, IFES participated in the CIAT's technical support committee, smoothing relations with the IEC and helping with the preparation of a preliminary election budget estimate of $284 million, and status chart for the fourteen transition laws.¹

On April 27, IFES facilitated a meeting between the IEC and the Quebec Chief Electoral Officer on electoral logistics to complement Canadian direct assistance in helping the IEC develop a logistical plan and presence.

IFES accompanied the IEC to Lubumbashi in June as it embarked on a series of regional workshops on voter registration that had been planned with the earlier DAI grant.

Partly as a result of the IEC 2nd Vice President's participation in the final round of IFES' electoral outreach program (see below), the IEC developed an outreach program in which it publicised electoral information and the role of the IEC through community radio broadcasts on March 22. In response to a request for support, IFES provided the IEC with 80 copies of the Petit Dictionnaire Pratique de Elections, ACE project, a draft electoral calendar, and a document stating the legal base for the IEC, which the IEC distributed to the community radio stations.

3. Impact and areas for development

Although the election calendar, and budget, logistics, and civic education plans developed with the IEC starting in November 2003 were well-constructed, they were outmoded by delays in passage of necessary implementing legislations. IFES stayed in touch with the IEC on a regular basis so the electoral process could not lose momentum. The attendance of IEC members at various outreach events helped build the bridges between government and society necessary for a successful electoral process. The lack of an electoral law stymied the electoral process. No domestic actor wanted to take any significant step without the law being passed, as the law would define what electoral system would be used and therefore how the election should be organized. IFES, with UN and EU partnership, continued to build the IEC capacity and awareness of electoral issues and how to implement them, so that when the constitution and election law came into place, the IEC could fully implement election preparations. Also, through its outreach work, IFES was able to do two things: one, make people aware of elections, the responsibilities of the electorate, how the voting process works, and voter registration procedures so that when IEC became fully operational, people would be more aware and know what to do; and, second, the logistics plans were developed so that they could become operational once the necessary legislation was in place.

C. Support to Congolese Civil Society

1. Information Distribution

With the additional $120,000, IFES created a work plan for examining the feasibility of refocusing its highly successful boîte image program on electoral related themes to inform sectors of the Congolese population who would otherwise be marginalized from the electoral process. It was determined that the 'boîte', an interactive visual toolkit, could be adapted to different election themes and used with a wide variety of audiences, including those not reachable by print or audiovisual media. With the $120,000 IFES also translated, printed and distributed the IEC Organic Law into the four main DRC local languages – Kikongo, Tshiluba, Swahili, and Lingala.

Information distribution centered around the dépêches, free weekly news bulletins distributed both electronically and, in Kinshasa, by hard copy at eight drop-off points. Throughout the project, over 85 civil society partners, representing associations in each of DRC's eleven provinces, received electronic copies of the dépêches. Consistent with IFES' mandate, the content of the dépêches focused on current democracy and governance events in DRC and electoral issues worldwide.

In response to an IEC request, in January and February IFES published 2,000 copies each of two documents. The first document, a 30-page booklet entitled L'ABC des Systèmes Electoraux, compared the advantages and disadvantages of various electoral systems, including a synopsis of the types of systems previously used in DRC. The second document, published with the support of USAID-OTI/CARE, was written by Mr. Ferdinand Kapanga Mutombo, president of the Ligue Congolais des Electeurs and a long-time partner of IFES. In March, through UPEC, 2,000 copies were distributed as follows: Institutions of transition, 826; organizations and associations, 514, activities, 650, authors, 10. On April 14, IFES gave 47 copies of the Petit Dictionnaire to Secretariat Générale de la Conference Episcopale Nationale du Congo, who said it would relay the information to its constituents. At the end of May, IFES reprinted 2,000 copies of the ABC des Systèmes Electoraux with the support of the European Commission.

The official publication launch for the Petit Dictionnaire was held on March 19 in the Kinshasa center, featuring the IEC president, first vice-president, and the second rappoiteur. The event received wide media coverage. The Petit Dictionnaire was distributed as follows: all transition institutions, 846; diplomats, 30; international organizations, 135; civil society, 137; radio and TV, 26; the author, 667, and IFES, 160. During the first two weeks of February, IFES distributed the 2,000 copies of the ABC des Systèmes Electoraux along similar distribution lines.

In early April, IFES accorded Le Potentiel, one of DRC's most prominent newspapers, an interview with Micheline Begin in a five-question format, where the COP shared that there is no ideal elections formula and that selections by elections administrators had to be based on local conditions, that the role of technical experts is to help clarify different options, and that civil society and political parties are complementary.

Throughout July IFES worked with Chemonics to develop three projects:

1. Creating awareness of electoral principles via and organization of 73 community-based radio stations in the DRC
2. Re-printing the Petit Dictionnaire
3. Designing an election awareness campaign using the Boite Image

2. Community Outreach

In October 2003, IFES developed a program on election generalities aimed at publicly diffusing electoral information through major topics to increase public understanding of electoral processes. Each topic followed a similar presentation format: two workshops, the first one in each Democracy Center and a second one in an outlying area, followed by a broadcast of the topic on local audio and televisual media. The first topic, "General Approaches to Elections" was presented in late October and November of 2003.

The second topic, presented at the end of November, centered on the role, composition and functioning of the Independent Electoral Commission. As security and funding allowed, these and related themes continued through August 15, 2004. The activities are summarized in the Table in Annex 1. The third main topic, the IEC Organic Law, focused on the legal basis that would govern IEC actions. Other topics included a day of reflection on why and how to vote, held in January, a March 20 conference/debate at the University of Kinshasa on types of elections systems. Outreach extended to Bukavu and Kisangani. Television, radio and newspapers provided excellent coverage of theses, extending reach well beyond the 600 persons who attended the general thematic sessions.

3. Democracy Resource Centers

The provisions of the Associate Award issued by USAID called for a change in the Resource Centers' use, with efforts focused on key electoral stakeholders rather than general access. IFES distributed written and radio communiqués throughout Kinshasa, Lubumbashi and Kikwit, informing audiences of this change and the renaming of the Resource Centers to Democracy Resource Centers. To ensure access by target groups, IFES closed all three Centers to the public at the start of November and developed a set of criteria for considering applications from target groups. Access cards were issued to bona fide and qualified civil society organizations. By December, 25 groups had access; by March 78, by July, 110, and by August 15, 120.

During the week ending November 29, a local partner working with IFES received funding from USAID-OTI to host a second round of the electoral awareness campaign. Two information sessions were held in Kinshasa, with over 100 people considered capable of relaying information attending on the role, composition and functioning of the IEC. The Lubumbashi Center hosted an Open House in March aimed at increasing women's participation in the Center. The following week, the number of women visitors increased significantly from 6.3% to 20.3%. The Kinshasa Center also made an effort to target outreach at women's groups by organizing La Femme et l'Internet, a documentary created through filming representatives of IFES partner organizations using the internet to follow activities of female poll workers in Rwanda and South Africa. The program was broadcast four times on RTNC, the national television channel, as part of their Festival of the Internet. A book discussion held on April 30 in the Lubumbashi Center on the Petit Dictionnaire resulted in numerous requests for the book and suggestions on how to integrate election themes into civic education. IFES also received requests for the Dictionnaire from various political authorities. An Open House at the Kinshasa Resource Center was held on April 2, the last in a series. This event exposed target civil society organizations and elicited their suggestions on how to improve services. These were the main suggestions: remain open through lunch, make photocopies of up to 10 available to readers, renew subscriptions to international weeklies such as Jeune Afrique, and Demain l'Afrique, support news bulletin distribution points as mini-resources centers, plan activities calendars several months in advance; coordinate speakers and moderators with CSOs, increase the number of participants, provide a light meal during all-day seminars, define areas of possible collaboration between IFES and CSOs, include in reports CSO activities and participation, train CSOs on election software.

4. Impact and areas for development

Experience shows that print materials regarding laws and elections information continued to be in great demand. Requests by civic education groups continued to exceed the COP's available time. It was also shown that target outreach improves the participation of women and should be continued in order to bring about inclusive elections and government.

IV. Summary of IFES-Assisted Results Obtained during the Agreement Period 1 November 2003 to 15 August 2004

1. During this period, the Organic Law was produced. This law, which finally allowed for a truly independent electoral commission to come into being, was approved by the legislature in June and, after Court review, came into effect in August.
2. IFES gained the trust and developed the confidence in the leadership of the Independent Electoral Commission necessary to develop technical assistance as requested, enabling The Independent Electoral Commission grew in awareness of tasks and capacity to fulfil them.
3. Electoral systems options and implications were presented to stakeholders through seminars and a pamphlet outlining various election systems, resulting in broad awareness of relative advantages and disadvantages of various electoral systems and the foundations of participatory democracies.
4. Through the Democracy Resource Centers, civil society was informed and engaged in developing DRC electoral processes and legal frameworks.
5. Through a Memorandum of Understanding, IFES and National Democratic Institute were able to share space and program compatibility, resulting in a healthy program synergy and stewardship of resources.

V. Conclusions and Recommendations

Though this was a lengthy transition (November 2003 to August 2004) and a difficult period (sustained by a stringent main award, a no-cost extension with three sub-awards, and a cost extension) for IFES, in the end IFES was able to maintain continuity of prime activities.

On the IFES side, the project feasibility was greatly enhanced by the addition of professional administration in the person of Jean Louis Boucherin (France) and the elevation to Chief of Party of the recently arrived Elections Expert Micheline Begin (Canada), aided by dedicated local staff members, especially Lyliane Ankwarpen, Dick Mputela, Annie Kalanga, Pamuke Mantana, and Resource Center Coordinators Bernadette Upite, Francine Nyemba, Barthélémy Kabongo, and Madeleine Lofomba. At IFES headquarters, program officer Caroline Vuillaume was replaced by Carole Kraemer, while Alexander Naqvi continua

Amidst sporadic civil unrest in Kinshasa, violent distractions in the eastern part of the country and Transitional Government Senate and National Assembly lulls in the passage of necessary implementing legislation, IFES managed to carry out a continuous program of support to the IEC, though a number of planned civil-society-oriented activities such as debates were curtailed.

Through most of this period the implementation of IEC plans continued to plod along, pending the statutory legitimating of the IEC in the form of the Organic Law. On the positive side, there was serious consideration of matters defining and refining the role of the IEC. As a result and to the benefit of the IEC and the people of the DRC, the IEC was constituted in a manner free of national assembly approval and staffing, a critical and precedent-setting achievement. Additionally, with the help of IFES and USAID, the IEC was able to survive this lengthy period of transition that had begun in May 2003 until they became operational in their own premises in late June 2004. Throughout, the IEC continued its hard work: developing calendars, budgets, logistics and helping shape the election legislative framework.

On the civil society side, IFES continued to prepare the way for elections participation and to encourage the linkages between the IEC as an organ of government and its civil society constituents. The Democracy Resource Centers were consulted and the number of partnering groups continued to increase steadily. Secure funding would have allowed an earlier and more timely arrival of logistical assistance and a honing in on election-related civic education. Under the circumstances of scarce and delayed USAID funds, good results were obtained. Despite occasional alarms, a gradual transition from devastating war to parliamentary means of resolving disputes was evident within this performance period.

Kinshasa, mai 2004

EXPOSE DES MOTIFS

Depuis l'indépendance de la République Démocratique du Congo jusqu'à ce jour, hormis la dispensation électorale de 1965, des élections pluralistes réellement libres, transparentes et démocratiques n'ont jamais pu être organisées dans le pays.

Pour résoudre la crise de légitimité du pouvoir qui a persisté en République Démocratique du Congo durant des décennies, l'organisation des élections est toujours retenue à l'ordre du jour par tous les régimes qui se sont succédé au pouvoir, mais sans avoir jamais connu un début d'exécution.

Entre-temps, la République Démocratique du Congo s'est retrouvée dans un conflit politico-militaire pour la conquête ou la conservation du pouvoir avec des déclarations d'engagement renouvelées de tous les protagonistes d'aller rapidement aux élections afin de résoudre la crise de légitimité en sollicitant l'arbitrage du peuple congolais, seul détenteur primaire du pouvoir.

Les négociations politiques qui se sont déroulées laborieusement durant près de quatre ans depuis la signature à Lusaka en Zambie de l'accord dit « Accords de Lusaka », sur le cessez-le-feu en République Démocratique du Congo, jusqu'au dialogue inter-congolais de Sun City en Afrique du Sud, ont abouti à un Accord Global et Inclusif et à une Constitution de la transition pour une gestion consensuelle du pays pendant une période de transition telle que prévue à l'article 196 de la Constitution de la transition.

L'un des objectifs majeurs assignés à cette transition est de conduire le pays vers un Etat de droit par l'organisation des élections libres, transparentes et démocratiques à tous les niveaux.

Les élections sus-visées étant spéciales, consensuelles et fondatrices d'un nouvel ordre politique, la plénière du dialogue inter-congolais a créé, par la résolution n° DIC/CPJ/09 la Commission Electorale Indépendante. Cette dernière est chargée d'assurer la préparation et l'organisation des élections libres, transparentes et démocratiques pendant la transition en République Démocratique du Congo. Elle est aujourd'hui instituée par la Constitution de la Transition en son article 154.

8. La Commission Electorale Indépendante est constituée d'une manière paritaire par les Composantes et entités au Dialogue inter-congolais en tenant compte de la représentation provinciale et de la représentation d'au moins une femme par Composante et Entité;
9. Elle est dotée de trois organes à savoir :
 - l'Assemblée Plénière, organe de conception, d'orientation et d'évaluation ;
 - le Bureau, organe de décision et de la gestion quotidienne de la Commission Electorale Indépendante ;
 - les Commissions Spéciales, organes techniques.

Dans la prise des décisions de ces organes, le consensus est la règle, le vote l'exception ;

10. Dans l'accomplissement de sa mission, la Commission Electorale Indépendante dispose de moyens puissants : elle peut saisir, le cas échéant, les juridictions compétentes. Celles-ci sont obligées de statuer selon la procédure de flagrance ;
11. La mission des Membres de la Commission Electorale Indépendante est nationale, ces derniers sont désignés pour toute la durée de la transition ;
12. En considération de la délicatesse de leur mission, les membres de la Commission Electorale Indépendante sont couverts par des immunités nécessaires à l'exercice de leurs missions ;
13. Dans le cadre de son organisation et de son fonctionnement, la Commission Electorale Indépendante établit des bureaux de représentation provinciale dont les membres sont nommés collégialement par les membres du Bureau sur proposition des Composantes et Entités en tenant compte de la représentation d'au moins deux femmes par bureau.

Elle dispose par ailleurs des agents et cadres techniques recrutés par elle ou mis à sa disposition à sa demande par les services publics compétents de l'Etat.

Elle peut faire appel aux experts nationaux et internationaux.

Elle agrée les demandes des observateurs nationaux et internationaux.

Elle reçoit la liste des témoins.

Par ces dispositions, sont ainsi rencontrées les véritables préoccupations du constituant, de voir instituer et fonctionner une Commission Electorale Indépendante, neutre et impartiale en vue de doter la République Démocratique du Congo des Institutions légitimes à l'issue des scrutins libres, démocratiques et transparents.
